Third Movement

1859 to 1875

THE BUILDING OF WALLA WALLA

From the sublime to the ridiculous the next scenes will appear to some people, for Main Street, Walla Walla, will be shown realistically as it was in the Sixties. At first the street is empty, as at daybreak, but it gradually fills up with the sort of people who were here when the town was a rough, wicked, western frontier-town on the trail to the gold mines of Idaho and Montana. Fifteen years of growth are shown in thirty minutes, the two chief events being the founding of Whitman Seminary in 1866 by Dr. Whitman's friend, Rev. Cushing Eells, and the building of the railroad in 1875 between Walla Walla and the Columbia river by Dr. D. S. Baker. Through all the fun and horse-play of this kaleidoscopic scene a seriousness of thought and purpose is indicated, as for example, by the organizing of the Methodist church, (1859) by the founding of St. Vincent's Academy, (1864) and of St. Paul's School (1872).

The Movement ends with 1875, when the period of the Pioneers came to a close. As The Voice of the Valley declares to the fascinated boys, "The railroad ushers in another day."
